Elonic World review: gentle, ad-free learning games from ABCs to algebra

Elonic World has ad-free learning games for ages 2 to 16, with a set of free ones that play with no login. What it does, what Premium adds and what to check.

Elonic World is a site of gentle, ad-free learning games for children aged 2 to 16, where each game is labeled by age and subject and a set of free ones play right in the browser with no login. The Elonic World team wrote to us to suggest it for our list, and we're glad they did. We've added it at number four on our 21 best free learning game sites for kids. Peabody (peabody.kids) is free for everyone through the end of 2026.

We wrote this from Elonic World's own pages on 16 November 2026, so treat it as a guide to what the site says it does.

What it does

- Games for every age on one shelf. The games page sorts everything by age band (2 to 5, 6 to 9, 10 to 12 and 13 to 16) and by subject: literacy, maths, logic, science, creative play, and feelings and kindness.
- Free games that start in one tap. The team's note named eight free games, and the pricing page lists the same eight: ABC & Alphabet and Counting Fun for the youngest, Addition Adventure and Memory Match, Times Tables and Logic Puzzle Quest, and Algebra Puzzles and a robot Coding Challenge for teenagers. The games page now marks more as Free, including Word Builder, Rocket Number Line, Habitat Detectives, World Explorer and Kindness Picnic.
- Small, clear goals. Word Builder has children spell picture words from scrambled letters and hear each word. Rocket Number Line works on place value and counting by tens in ten rocket missions. Habitat Detectives matches ten animals to six habitats and asks how fur, gills and camouflage help.
- Kindness alongside the academics. Kindness Picnic walks preschoolers through naming feelings, sharing, taking turns and including others, in seven short stories.
- No ads. The site says it is ad-free, with no tracking or ads in the parts children see.

What Premium adds

Elonic Premium costs ?2.99 a month or ?29.99 a year. It unlocks the rest of the shelf, about half the games, such as Phonics Blending, Sight Words, Subtraction Quest, Fraction Fun, Money Maths, Telling the Time and Music Maker. It also keeps progress with a family account. Storybooks are sold separately. The free games need no account at all; the site says a parent email is only collected if a grown-up signs up.

Tips for home

1. Start with the free game that matches your child's age band, and play the first round together.
2. For a preschooler, pair ABC & Alphabet with Kindness Picnic: one for letters, one for feelings.
3. For an older child, try Times Tables for five minutes, then Logic Puzzle Quest as a calm cool-down.
4. Play the free games for a week before deciding whether Premium is worth it for your family.

Why small games work

The best learning games stick to one idea, give quick feedback and let a child stop without losing much. Elonic World's games are built that way: one skill per game, a clear age label and a short round. That makes them easy to fit into the ten minutes before dinner, and easy for a parent to see what the game is teaching. We like that the youngest children get games about feelings as well as letters, since getting along with others is a big part of being four.

On privacy

The privacy policy says the site doesn't collect information directly from children and uses no advertising identifiers. If a parent makes an account, it holds the parent's email, a child's first name or nickname, an age, an avatar and the child's game progress, and a parent can delete a profile and all of its data from the Parent Dashboard. Analytics only load after a grown-up chooses "Accept All" on the cookie banner, so you can play without them.

How it compares

On our list it sits at number four, alongside public media and nonprofit sites like PBS KIDS Games and Starfall. Its strengths are the range of ages on one shelf, no ads, and the free games that open without a login. If your child enjoys it, they might also like the stories and games in our library, which are free and have no ads.

Good to know

The grid mixes free and Premium games, so look for the Free label before your child taps. Prices are in euros, and checkout is for grown-ups. If you try it and something on this page is out of date, tell us and we'll fix it the same day.

Kind games, clearly labeled, and a gentle way to start the day.
